I mention elsewhere that London Art Week has quickly become one of the big attractions of the Summer Season and the core of the initiative is the scale and quality of dealer exhibitions around Mayfair and St. James's.

Among the 50 specialist participants there are this year more dedicated exhibitions than ever before and these include important shows worth a closer look. Fine art from Uccello and Tintoretto to Modigliani and Duchamp dominates but other fields covered include ancient arms and armour, 16th century stained glass and ancient Greek coins.

Just a sample of dealer shows includes 'Deities and Daily Life' at Mayfair antiques expert Charles Ede, 'Of Gods and Men' at Daniel Katz, 'Antique Inspiration' at Tomasso Brothers, 'Dutch Flower Pieces 1607-1814 and Aspects of British Impressionism' at Richard Green and 'Classicism Reimagined: Master Paintings and Sculpture 1700-1900' at Lullo Pampoulides.

Andreas Pampoulides and Andrea Lullo launch their new gallery at 33 Cork Street, W1 on June 30 with their exhibition.

Masterpiece now provides a masterclass for combining art market excellence with art world glamour

FEW could argue that Masterpiece, the high spot of the London Summer Season, is not now one of the world's very top fairs. It has reached this status in a relatively short time since it was launched...

London Art Week proves a big draw around Mayfair and St. James's

NOW an established facet of the London Summer Season London Art Week is held around some 50 galleries in Mayfair and St. James's from July 1 to 8, and this year with a preview on June 30. ...

Trinity Fine Art hold an exhibition 'From Wax to Bronze-Themes and Materials in Sculpture' at their Bruton Street, Mayfair gallery and it features the splendid terracotta 'Bacchus' we picture. The sculpture is from 16th century Florence and is attributed to the intriguingly titled Master of the Unruly Children.
